

WOW OH! Animated Music Video Production Guide

Single Source of Truth

1. Purpose

This document is the definitive production guide for the animated music video WOW OH! It establishes the creative direction, visual world, character presentation, cinematography, and shot-by-shot plan for the current production.

2. Music Overview

Song Title: WOW OH!

Runtime: 3:05.3

Approximate Tempo: ~99 BPM

Musical Style: Big Band, New Orleans Jazz, light Hip Hop, with deep and soulful male vocals in the style of a charismatic villain host.

Lead Performer: Mr. V

Supporting Vocal Group: The Dolls

Core Emotional Arc: The video begins with mystery, menace, and invitation; moves through stress, temptation, and release; and ends in a euphoric supernatural nightlife climax followed by a theatrical fade into darkness.

3. Creative Thesis

A stressed and overburdened viewer is welcomed into Mr. V's magical underground club, where work pressure, resentment, anxiety, and emotional baggage are transformed into music, dancing, laughter, and supernatural release. Mr. V acts as master of ceremonies, seducer, therapist, ringmaster, and villain host. The club is both a performance venue and a place of ritual release.

4. Story Summary

The video opens with Mr. V addressing the audience directly from the shadows. He introduces the club with a mix of charm and mischief, then summons the space to life. The front door opens and the club reveals itself as larger, stranger, and more magical than it first appeared.

The Dolls enter as the chorus voice of the club. Their presence marks the shift from monologue to performance. Mr. V presents the club as a cure for ordinary frustration: work stress, bad bosses, ignored messages, anxiety, and the exhaustion of daily life. These pressures briefly manifest as a surreal nightmare of office drudgery and emotional suffocation.

Mr. V then reverses that pressure. He commands the audience to breathe, release tension, and take part in the nightlife ritual. The club grows busier, brighter, and more ecstatic. The band, the DJ booth, the bar, the dance floor, and the crowd all converge into a full supernatural celebration. The final section lands on acceptance and release: no hurries, no worries, the past is the past. The club fades away until only Mr. V's glowing eyes remain.

5. Visual World Bible

5.1 Setting

The setting is a magical underground nightlife club that mirrors a real live-music venue. It should feel tactile, atmospheric, and inhabited. The environment includes:

- a front entrance door that acts as a portal
- a stage with microphone, house band, and spotlights
- a bar and back-bar glow
- a DJ booth
- a dance floor filled with moving patrons
- visible wood architecture and overhead floorboards
- a kitchen pass-through or service window for the “cookin’ in the kitchen” lyric
- hallways and back corners that can stretch and distort when magic intensifies

The space should feel cohesive. It is one club that can transform, rather than a series of unrelated locations.

5.2 Overall Aesthetic

The visual identity combines:

- haunted jazz club elegance
- voodoo nightlife energy
- theatrical villain charm
- magical underground realism
- rhythmic, music-driven motion

The world should feel rich, lived-in, and cinematic rather than flat or cartoonishly random.

5.3 Color Palette

Primary palette

- poisonous green glow
- rich purple smoke and fabric accents
- warm amber stage lights
- deep black shadows
- touches of hot pink or gold for major chorus lifts

Lighting behavior

- Mr. V is often rim-lit or underlit for dramatic effect
- the club should pulse more brightly during the choruses
- the office nightmare section should desaturate toward gray and cold fluorescent tones
- the bridge and finale should return to warmth, magic, and saturated nightlife color

5.4 Texture and Surface Detail

- smoky air, visible haze, dust motes, and stage atmosphere
- polished wood, worn floorboards, velvet curtains, brass fixtures
- stitched cloth textures on the Dolls
- reflective glassware at the bar
- old venue surfaces that feel used, not pristine
- magical smoke that behaves like a physical performance element

6. Character Bible

6.1 Mr. V

Mr. V is the central figure and must remain visually consistent throughout the video.

Character identity

- charismatic villain host
- supernatural master of ceremonies
- seductive, playful, dangerous, and amused
- in complete command of the room

Appearance

- tall, lean silhouette
- skull-like or sharply stylized face
- glowing green eyes
- black top hat
- purple tailcoat or long formal stage coat
- dark trousers and polished shoes
- cane with a decorative skull or carved head at the top
- expressive hands and elegant posture

Performance language

- direct eye contact with camera
- hat tips, shrugs, flourishes, cane spins, finger points
- smooth, deliberate body movement during spoken and sung sections
- larger, more rhythmic movement during rap and chorus sections
- never frantic; even at peak energy he remains controlled and theatrical

6.2 The Dolls

The Dolls are living voodoo-doll performers, not porcelain dolls. They belong naturally to this underground world.

Character identity

- backup singers and dancers
- magical club regulars
- playful, eerie, stylish, and fully alive

Appearance

- stitched fabric skin with subtle seams
- expressive faces
- fingered hands
- realistic nightlife clothing with vintage performance influence
- flapper-inspired silhouettes are appropriate, but the clothing should read as real garments worn by living voodoo dolls
- movement should be slightly snappy or stop-motion influenced without becoming stiff or robotic

Performance language

- chorus hooks are their strongest feature
- they should move in sync during refrain sections
- they can lean into exaggerated angular poses and sharp musical accents
- they should feel like they enjoy performing and understand the club's ritual energy

6.3 House Band

The house band is an undead jazz ensemble integrated into the club world.

Appearance and vibe

- lean, stylish jazz musicians
- slightly skeletal or spiritually uncanny rather than grotesque
- brass instruments, upright bass, drums, piano
- pinstripes, hats, suspenders, or classic jazz silhouettes

Their role is to deepen the sense that this club is alive with music from wall to wall.

6.4 Crowd and Patrons

The crowd includes dancing patrons, spirits, and voodoo-world regulars. They should feel varied but belong to the same nightlife ecosystem. Their purpose is to make the club feel active, communal, and cathartic.

7. Performance and Motion Standards

7.1 Choreography Language

Movement should be driven by swing, bounce, snap, and groove.

- intros and spoken sections: restrained theatrical motion
- rap sections: more pointed body language and forward rhythmic drive
- choruses: synchronized dance and crowd participation
- bridge: open, floating, relieved energy

- outro: graceful theatrical slowdown

7.2 Camera Language

The camera should behave like a participant in the performance.

Preferred shot behavior:

- slow push-ins for menace and invitation
- lateral glides across the room for stage and crowd geography
- whip pans or snap reframes on stronger rhythmic hits
- low angles to emphasize Mr. V's command
- frontal stage framing during choreographed chorus sections
- occasional POV framing when the audience is being directly addressed or transformed

7.3 Editing Rhythm

Cuts should ride the groove, not merely the lyric syllables.

- spoken lines may hold longer
- rap lines benefit from denser cutting and gesture-based punctuation
- choruses should feel more musical and repetitive in structure
- bridge and final release should breathe more
- the outro should elongate the sense of disappearance

8. Production Design and Recurring Motifs

8.1 Recurring Motifs

The following motifs should recur throughout the video:

- glowing eyes in darkness
- purple smoke and green magical vapor
- doors and thresholds
- glasses, bottles, and barlight shimmer
- stage spotlights and haze
- stitched textures on the Dolls
- direct address from Mr. V
- transformation of stress into nightlife release

8.2 Transformation Logic

When the world becomes more magical, it should transform the existing club environment rather than jump to disconnected imagery. Walls stretch, lights pulse, shadows detach, and practical venue spaces become enchanted extensions of themselves.

8.3 Office-Nightmare Logic

The work-stress material is a temporary manifestation inside the club's magic. It should feel like the club revealing and purging the viewer's burdens, not a permanent change of setting.

9. Shot List

Shot 1

Timecode: 0:00-0:05

Audio: “Welcome back... don’t worry about all those... heathens...”

Shot Description: Extreme close-up on Mr. V’s face in shadow. He tips the brim of his top hat with one hand. The lower half of his face is visible first; then his glowing green eyes emerge as the brim lifts. Thin purple smoke slips across the frame.

Camera: Locked close-up with a slow, deliberate push-in.

Performance: Calm, intimate, amused. He welcomes the viewer as if they are a returning guest.

Transition: The camera continues to drift inward as the smoke thickens.

Shot 2

Timecode: 0:06-0:10

Audio: “I can HARDLY blame them! I’d be mad too... what can you do?”

Shot Description: The camera pulls back to a waist shot. Mr. V leans against a piano or stage prop and spreads his hands in an exaggerated shrug. Behind him, his shadows lag half a beat behind, echoing his gesture with mocking laughter.

Camera: Gentle pullback to medium shot.

Performance: Sardonic charm. He appears entertained by human frustration.

Transition: He turns his cane outward as though cueing the room itself.

Shot 3

Timecode: 0:11-0:20

Audio: Intro instrumental

Shot Description: Wide shot. Mr. V steps into center stage and spins his cane. The floor shadow at his feet ripples, swells upward, and briefly becomes a dancing silhouette that bows to him before dissolving back into the floor. Lamps flare. The club begins waking up.

Camera: Full-body framing with a subtle circular move around Mr. V.

Performance: Controlled conjuring; he is waking the club as a ritual act.

Transition: The cane lands with a tap that cues the band reveal.

Shot 4

Timecode: 0:21-0:30

Audio: Up-tempo instrumental lift

Shot Description: Fast musical montage of the house band coming alive: brass valves depressed in rhythm, drumsticks snapping down, upright bass strings plucked, piano keys struck, cymbals catching green reflections, sax smoke curling into the air. The montage establishes that the entire club is now in motion.

Camera: Quick inserts, close-ups, and one short lateral sweep across the bandstand.

Performance: Energetic, tightly musical, stylish rather than chaotic.

Transition: End on a stage-wide hit, then cut to Mr. V pointing toward the entrance.

Shot 5

Timecode: 0:31-0:35

Audio: “Front door, everybody come listen to Mr. Voodoo...”

Shot Description: Mr. V stands downstage and points his cane toward the club’s heavy front door. It bursts open and floods the room with green-white light. Silhouetted patrons enter as though called by name.

Camera: Medium-wide frontal stage view.

Performance: Inviting but commanding; he is summoning the room.

Transition: The incoming light becomes the next scene’s source glow.

Shot 6

Timecode: 0:36-0:40

Audio: “You gotta pay attention when I’m cookin’ in the kitchen...”

Shot Description: Mr. V moves to a kitchen pass-through or service window inside the club. He stirs a glowing vessel or taps on a drum-like surface that throws off magical vapor and musical notes. The lyric reads as nightlife alchemy rather than literal cooking.

Camera: Medium shot with slight push-in on the action.

Performance: Playful, knowing, and showman-like.

Transition: Vapor spreads into the room and begins to bend the space.

Shot 7

Timecode: 0:41-0:45

Audio: “Ladies and gents, everybody in the middle. You wanna come in? Okay! Answer my riddle:”

Shot Description: Mr. V strides onto the dance floor and opens his arms. The walls subtly curve outward and the room begins to expand. The crowd parts to create a circular clearing around him.

Camera: Low-angle medium-wide shot, slowly rising.

Performance: Ringmaster confidence. This is an invitation and a challenge.

Transition: The space continues stretching into the next beat.

Shot 8

Timecode: 0:46-0:50

Audio: “It’s bigger on the inside... give it a little jiggle”

Shot Description: The club interior briefly becomes impossible: the hallway stretches, doorframes bow outward, hanging lights wobble, bottles tremble on shelves, and the room bounces in time to the beat. Mr. V winks directly at the camera as the environment snaps elastically.

Camera: Slight fisheye effect with a gentle forward drift.

Performance: Delighted, conspiratorial, and theatrical.

Transition: The motion resolves into the chorus downbeat.

Shot 9

Timecode: 0:51-0:55

Audio: Dolls: “Oo Wow! Oh! Oh my, oh!”

Shot Description: The Dolls are revealed in a clean stage composition under blue-green spotlights.

They begin motionless, then snap into synchronized dance positions on the first vocal phrase. Their dresses swing and their stitched forms catch the light beautifully.

Camera: Frontal medium-wide stage shot.

Performance: Sharp, synchronized, inviting, and iconic.

Transition: Their final pose angles toward a glowing door.

Shot 10

Timecode: 0:56-1:00

Audio: Mr. V: “What they got going on in there?!”

Shot Description: The Dolls cluster near a glowing keyhole in a large interior door, peeking in with exaggerated curiosity. Mr. V suddenly appears behind them from below frame, looming with a huge grin. The Dolls jump and react in comic surprise.

Camera: Medium shot from slightly behind the Dolls, then a quick reframe to include Mr. V.

Performance: Mischief and humor.

Transition: Mr. V sweeps his coat across frame.

Shot 11

Timecode: 1:01-1:05

Audio: “I heard they make your troubles disappear!”

Shot Description: Mr. V snaps his coat or cape across the center Doll. When the fabric passes, the Doll’s visible burden disappears: a pile of symbolic stress slips away in smoke and glitter, leaving her visibly lighter and delighted. The effect reads as emotional release, not harm.

Camera: Medium shot with magical fabric wipe.

Performance: Reassuring but dramatic.

Transition: The smoke carries the frame into the next lyric.

Shot 12

Timecode: 1:06-1:10

Audio: “Don’t take your best dance to the grave!”

Shot Description: Mr. V and the Dolls hit a crisp chorus accent together. The dance floor lights up under their feet and nearby patrons join in. This marks the chorus as a communal call to live fully in the moment.

Camera: Wider stage-and-floor composition.

Performance: Bright, energetic, and celebratory.

Transition: A whip pan drives into the stress verse.

Shot 13

Timecode: 1:11-1:15

Audio: “Your boss is calling with something that coulda’ been an email, got you hatin’ retail”

Shot Description: The club briefly reshapes into an office-nightmare vignette. The dance floor becomes a gray aisle of cubicles and fluorescent glare. A ringing desk phone vibrates aggressively. Mr. V remains present inside the scene, now like a host guiding the audience through their own stress memory.

Camera: Forward push down the cubicle aisle.

Performance: Satirical and knowing.

Transition: The camera lands on a workstation overwhelmed by clutter.

Shot 14

Timecode: 1:16-1:21

Audio: “Thinking bout the office where they don’t know how to read well” / Male Doll: “Even with the detailed notes that they never read” / All: “BREATHE!”

Shot Description: A male Doll employee gestures helplessly toward a stack of ignored notes and instructions. Above him, an oversized boss-figure or looming office presence crowds the frame. On “BREATHE!” the nightmare pauses, everything sucks inward for a beat, and the world goes still.

Camera: Medium shot on the male Doll, then a quick push toward the looming boss shape.

Performance: Frustrated, then suddenly released on the shouted command.

Transition: The stillness creates space for the decompression sequence.

Shot 15

Timecode: 1:22-1:26

Audio: “Think. You’re safe, let that jaw get slack so you can drink.”

Shot Description: The office palette softens and dissolves. Mr. V re-enters in close proximity and offers a glowing drink to the viewer. His other hand gently signals “relax.” Tension visibly drains from the environment as fluorescent gray melts back into club color.

Camera: Intimate medium close-up with direct address.

Performance: Comforting, hypnotic, confident.

Transition: The offered glass crosses the lens and becomes a visual wipe.

Shot 16

Timecode: 1:27-1:32

Audio: “You need some peace. Don’t wonder why he won’t text back, I mean please. Tomorrow ain’t today, no flack.”

Shot Description: The glass lowers to reveal the dance floor restored. Phones, paperwork, and stress symbols drift away and dissolve into glittering smoke. The crowd’s body language relaxes. The Dolls sway more loosely, smiling.

Camera: Gentle glide across the floor and bar area.

Performance: Relief, perspective, and re-entry into nightlife.

Transition: The groove opens into a room-wide showcase.

Shot 17

Timecode: 1:33-1:41

Audio: “We got a band spinning out / Got a DJ in the booth / Every flavor you could savor / Got a dance that you can do / So put your new hat on...”

Shot Description: Rapid but legible montage of the club’s offerings: the jazz band driving hard, the DJ booth working the room, drinks moving across the bar, hats and accessories, feet on the dance floor, and patrons joining different styles of movement. Mr. V threads through the montage as the host who owns the energy of every room inside the venue.

Camera: Fast insert montage with one strong sweeping pass through the center of the club.

Performance: Buoyant, confident, irresistible.

Transition: End on a big stage-centered hit to launch chorus two.

Shot 18

Timecode: 1:42-1:47

Audio: Dolls: “Oo Wow! Oh! Oh my, oh!” / Mr. V: “What they got going on in there?!”

Shot Description: Chorus two begins with the same recognizable structure as the first chorus, but the club is now fuller and more active. The Dolls sing in formation while Mr. V plays to the camera from a position just behind or beside them. The room pulses brighter than before.

Camera: Frontal medium-wide shot with a stronger push-in than chorus one.

Performance: Familiar but bigger.

Transition: Cut on musical accent.

Shot 19

Timecode: 1:48-1:52

Audio: “I heard they make your troubles disappear!”

Shot Description: Mr. V gestures across the room and multiple patrons experience miniature releases at once: tension vanishes, shoulders drop, people smile, and the space visibly lightens. The club is now operating as a collective cure.

Camera: Diagonal sweep across the crowd.

Performance: Expansive and generous.

Transition: Sweep carries through to the next refrain line.

Shot 20

Timecode: 1:53-1:57

Audio: “I got a cure for the hate you crave”

Shot Description: Mr. V sings front and center under a tight spotlight while the Dolls angle around him. He delivers the line as a direct promise. The crowd behind him responds with raised hands, swaying bodies, and visible buy-in.

Camera: Medium shot with slight low angle.

Performance: Persuasive, almost sermon-like.

Transition: Lighting blooms outward into the final refrain line.

Shot 21

Timecode: 1:58-2:02

Audio: “Don’t take your best dance to the grave!”

Shot Description: The entire main cast lands in a choreographed feature moment: Mr. V, the Dolls, band members visible behind, patrons dancing in layers, and the whole room moving on the same pulse. This is the fullest expression of the chorus to this point.

Camera: Wide hero shot of the full room.

Performance: Exuberant and communal.

Transition: Music opens into the instrumental bridge.

Shot 22

Timecode: 2:03-2:12

Audio: Instrumental bridge

Shot Description: The camera undertakes a fluid fly-through of the club. It passes the bar, the stage, the booth, the dance floor, and the back corners of the venue, showing each space alive and breathing to the music. Magic now feels embedded everywhere rather than confined to Mr. V alone.

Camera: Smooth traveling shot through the room.

Performance: Environmental storytelling rather than line delivery.

Transition: The move circles back toward center stage.

Shot 23

Timecode: 2:13-2:22

Audio: Instrumental bridge continues

Shot Description: A sequence of escalating feature moments: a quick brass flourish from the band, a brief dance flourish from the Dolls, a bartender sliding a glowing drink, the DJ cutting or cueing the room, patrons cheering, and Mr. V stepping onto center stage to reclaim visual focus before the bridge vocal begins.

Camera: Short inserts tied together by rhythmic snap cuts.

Performance: Rising anticipation.

Transition: End on Mr. V poised under a focused spotlight.

Shot 24

Timecode: 2:23-2:27

Audio: “No hurries, no worries my friend...”

Shot Description: The choreography loosens and breathes. Mr. V sings more openly, less like a trickster and more like a guide. The crowd sways with visible relief. The room feels safe, communal, and fully surrendered to the night.

Camera: Slow gliding medium-wide shot.

Performance: Warm, reassuring, and sincere without losing theatricality.

Transition: Continue the glide into the next lyric.

Shot 25

Timecode: 2:28-2:32

Audio: “It all works out, in the end...”

Shot Description: Close and medium reaction moments show different patrons letting go: a smile breaking through tension, a hand releasing a clenched drink napkin, shoulders dropping, friends reconnecting through dance. The emotional stakes become personal and human.

Camera: Series of short close-to-medium inserts.

Performance: Relief and emotional release.

Transition: The camera returns to Mr. V for the philosophical lines.

Shot 26

Timecode: 2:33-2:37

Audio: “Intended, unintended, don’t matter at all”

Shot Description: Mr. V stands amid the moving crowd while accidents, detours, and disappointments are symbolized by tiny fragments of paper, text bubbles, and stress debris floating up and dissolving into purple smoke.

Camera: Medium shot with environmental motion around him.

Performance: Reflective, in control, releasing judgment.

Transition: He shifts focus back to the viewer.

Shot 27

Timecode: 2:38-2:43

Audio: “Past is the past baby, pass the ball!”

Shot Description: Mr. V conjures a glowing sphere of shadow-and-light energy in his hand. He tosses it toward the camera as if handing the viewer their own release. The cast behind him reacts with a final celebratory hit.

Camera: Medium close-up becoming near-POV as the sphere approaches lens.

Performance: Commanding and triumphant.

Transition: The thrown sphere wipes the frame.

Shot 28

Timecode: 2:44-2:45

Audio: “Woo!”

Shot Description: In a sharp punctuation beat, Mr. V kicks or redirects the glowing sphere deeper into the room, sending a streak of light over the crowd. The room erupts in one last burst of color and applause.

Camera: Quick wide accent shot.

Performance: Flashy, playful punctuation.

Transition: Energy begins to taper into the outro.

Shot 29

Timecode: 2:46-2:55

Audio: Instrumental outro

Shot Description: The club settles into a graceful afterglow. Dancing continues, but with less intensity. Lights begin dimming in layers across the venue while Mr. V remains visible on the stage. The haze thickens and the room becomes increasingly abstract.

Camera: Slow pullback from the stage.

Performance: Final composure and ownership of the room.

Transition: Continue dimming toward near-darkness.

Shot 30

Timecode: 2:56-3:05

Audio: Instrumental outro continues to end

Shot Description: The final visible club lights click off one by one until the room is swallowed by darkness. Only Mr. V’s glowing green eyes remain suspended in the center of frame. After a beat, the eyes fade away completely.

Camera: Static or nearly static final composition.

Performance: The final image is iconic and ominous.

Transition: Fade to black.

10. Continuity Standards

The following elements are mandatory across the full production:

- Mr. V remains visually consistent in costume, silhouette, and supernatural demeanor.
- The Dolls remain living voodoo-doll performers with stitched cloth textures, fingered hands, and realistic clothing.
- The club remains one continuous magical venue, even when it transforms.
- Green and purple remain the primary magical colors.
- Chorus sections must feel recognizable as recurring signature performance beats.
- The office-nightmare section must read as a stress manifestation inside the club's larger world.
- The final emotional direction is release, acceptance, and celebratory nightlife catharsis.

11. Desired Viewer Experience

The viewer should feel welcomed, seduced, amused, understood, and finally released. The video should carry the sensation of entering a strange club in a bad mood and leaving lighter, looser, and more alive.
